Ascent Construction, Inc. Receives Distinguished Intermountain Contractor Award for the Davis Conference Center in Layton

On December 11, 2008, Ascent Construction, Inc. (Ascent) was honored at the Intermountain Contractor "Best of 2008 Awards" Ceremony held at the Grand America Hotel for building the new Davis Conference Center addition in Layton, Utah.

The scope of work for this project included a new 43,249 SF expansion to the existing conference facility. Construction elements consisted of a masonry addition, exhibition halls with additional meeting rooms, pre-function area, food preparation and service area, additional service areas and a mezzanine level for additional storage, state of the art audio visual system's and electrical rooms. Interior walls reach to a height of 30 feet.

The building exterior is a split faced staggered CMU. This choice of masonry material provides a modern feel while maintaining the sleek lines of the conference center as a whole. The CMU also provides superior sound, security and stability to the entire structure. In addition to the masonry, the building exterior features insulated metal panel siding and aluminum/glass storefront façade. During construction, the conference facility was open and operating on a daily basis. The Good Manufacturing Practice (GMP) for this project was set prior to construction and the budget was strictly maintained throughout the project.

Barry M. Burton, assistant Director/Project Manager for the Davis County Department of Community and Economic Development said,

"I am very pleased with the quality of work on our expansion. I have been told by several visitors and county employees that the building is beautiful and it is apparent there has been a high degree of attention to details. The project was completed on time and within budget. I feel that the project has been a great success. I hope to work with Ascent again on future County construction projects."

Ascent Construction, Inc., located at 25 South Main in Centerville, is proud to be the general contractor on this award-winning project. The Davis Conference Center addition was designed by GSBS Architects of Salt Lake City.
